LIZZIE JONES' SAD DEATH

Milesburg Young Lady Instantly Killed Thursday Morning

WALKING ON TRACK

Struck by the East Bound Passenger Train at the Bellefonte Central Junction on Her Way Home

IT WAS A SAD BLOW TO THE FAMILY

One of the saddest accidents that has taken place in this vicinity for some time occurred Thursday forenoon about 9:30 o'clock. Miss Lizzie Jones, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Newton Jones, of Milesburg, was struck by a Bald Eagle valley passenger train and instantly killed.

Miss Jones had been visiting in Bellefonte Wednesday afternoon with Mrs. Arvilla Gingher and in the evening went to the home of Mrs. Jane Foster on Pine street where she remained over night, being very intimate with Mrs. Foster and her daughters, Harriet and Sara. She had intended to return to her home in Milesburg early next day, but having started to read an interesting book in the evening remained long enough in the morning to finish reading it. As was her custom while she was employed in this place she started to walk to her home and at the time mentioned when in the vicinity of the junction of the Bellefonte Central railroad with the Pennsylvania she was struck by the east bound passenger train on the Bald Eagle valley railroad which leaves here at 9.00 and backs to Milesburg, It is customary for a brakeman to ride on the platform on all trains backing into Bellefonte and all that back out, and it is stated by some that there was no one on the platform at that time. However the real truth in this respect could not be learned.

Several persons who saw the accident state that the unfortunate young lady was attracted by the train on the Central Railroad of Pennsylvania which was a special carrying the Presbyterian picnic party, and was unmindful of the approaching train which killed her. The upper portion of her head was cut off by the cruel wheels of the car and the body was otherwise mutilated, causing instant death.

The news of the accident soon reached the ears of her friends and expressions of grief were heard on all sides. Miss Jones had been employed in Bellefonte for several years and during the past season was a milliner in the store of Miss Snyder. She was a very amiable and pleasant young lady and had a host of friends who were pained to hear of her sad and untimely death.

The unfortunate young lady was aged just about eighteen years and her death comes in the most interesting time of a young persons life. She was a young lady who was very attentive to all her duties and always had a pleasant word for everybody. Part of her mission to Bellefonte on Wednesday was to arrange for a party to go camping on Monday.

Besides her grief stricken parents, Mr. and Mrs. Newton Jones, she is survived by two brothers Lee and Roy at home, and Mrs. James Lucas, of Avonmore.

Funeral was held Sunday at Milesburg. The services were held in the Methodist church and the house of worship was crowded to its fullest capacity and some were unable to get in, an evidence of the deep sympathy of the friends of the deceased young lady and sorrowing family. The pastor Rev. M. C. Piper preached a very touching sermon. Interment was made in the cemetery at Curtin.

SEMI-MONTHLY COUNCIL

Few Matters of Importance at Monday Nights Session. Sidewalks Need Attention.

The regular semi-monthly session of the borough council was held on Monday evening with President Judge in the chair and the following members present: Harper, Hamilton, Keller, Musser, Beezer, Wagner, Kirk and Shuey.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read by clerk Kelly and approved.

Chairman Hamilton of the Street Committee reported various repairs to streets and alleys. The street in front of the Bush house has been repaired.

The Water Committee reported fixing tail race at water works.

The Market committee reported $5 80 market fees.

The people of Logan street are complaining of the condition of the gutters on that street. The board of health says it is a menace to the health of residents. It was reported by the Sanitary Committee.

The contract for painting the roof of the Patlic building was awarded to James Cornelly his bid being the lowest received.

Notices are to be printed and distributed notifying water users that all water tax not paid by the 15th of August will have 5 per cent added as a penalty.

Council seemed to think that Centre County Commissioners should put a new walk in front of the Court house. It is in bad shape and is very much in need of repair.

A crossing is asked for on Water street near the Bellefonte Lumber Company's office. Council decided that they would build crossing if property owners would build walks.

Various walks and pavements in town are complained of, among them Chas. Kurtz's, Dr. Brockerhoff's F. R. Reynold's and Brant House.

The following bills were approved and orders drawn.

Street Pay Roll	91.04
Police Pay Roll	52.50
A. C. Smith uniform	24.00
A. Allison	1.25
H. E. Fenlon	7.00

Coroner's Inquest.

Evidence in the death of Lizzie Jones, of Milesburg, was taken by Coroner P. S. Fisher on Monday. The coroner's jury was composed of the following gentlemen: Willard Hall, Miles Walker, Fred Montgomery, Paul Shaeffer and Frank Bartley. The trainmen were called as witnesses as well as several who were near when the accident occurred

The principal witnesses were the brakeman who rode on the flatform of the rear car of the train and Rev. D. Barshinger, of this place. Contrary to the report circulated all the witnesses testified that the brakeman was at his station and attending to his duties. It appears that the unfortunate young lady was walking on what the railroaders call the "six-foot," the space between the tracks, and when the brakeman saw her he blew the air whistle as a warning. She was watching one of the other trains in that vicinity at the time and stepped onto the track on which the train was backing out from Bellefonte just as the train was there. The brakeman was blowing the whistle as loud as was possible and had pulled the cord signalling the engineer to stop, but the train was too close and struck and killed her. Others testified to the same facts, the only difference in opinion and testimoney being which train had attracted her attention.

After hearing the evidence the coroner's jury rendered a verdict that Lizzie Jones met with an accidental death, and the railroad company and its employes exonerated from blame.

Warning is too Late.

We are in receipt of a letter from the Retail Merchants' Association of Pennsylvania which is a note of warning to the merchants not to pay money to any one soliciting in the name of the association. The warning is, however, too late for the Bellefonte merchants, as the solicitors have come and gone. The letter states that no one is authorized to collect from merchants for the association as it is supported from its natural revenues. It seems to be the opinion of the association that should the merchantile tax law be repealed there would be another tax law to take its place. They might as well pay tax through one channel as another.

FISHERMAN'S EXPERIENCE

A Chatham's Run Man Meets Three Black Bear Unexpectedly

FRIGHTENED BY YELL

When the Lone Fisherman Emitted an Indian War Whoop the Bears Scampered Away.

BEAR WERE WATCHING HIM FISH

Prof. John McCloskey, of Chatham's Run Clinton County, had an early morning experience with three bear while trout fishing one day recently, and which unnerved him considerably for a time. He left home in the morning at sunrise intending to whip one of the brooks, about two miles distant, for trout, taking along only his rod and a lunch. About 8 o'clock that morning he was standing along the bank casting the fly in the stream, where all was quiet, save the noise of the rippling waters. Becoming hungry he secured a sandwich and holding it in one hand and the rod in the other he discovered that a fish had taken hold of his hook. As he stepped back from the water to lay his lunch on a stone so he could reel in his catch he was horrified to see two big black bear and a smaller one emerge from a thicket so near him that he could have touched them with his fishing rod. Mr. McCloskey states he was so frightened he gave a yell that could be heard a mile. This evidently scared the bears, for they wheeled about, gave a grunt and started over a mountain path as fast as they could run, much to the satisfaction of the lone fisherman, who quickly retraced his steps and soon arrived home. Had the bears not done as they did Mr. McCloskey probably might have been obliged to give these denizens of the forest a tussle.

Dragged by Foot.

Man has many almost miraculous escapes from losing his life and this will now more than ever be believed by George Howard Ripka, tenant on the Alexander McCoy, farm, at Potters Mills. Friday evening Mr. Ripka saddled a rather spirited young horse, and rode to the meadow to corral the cattle, when the animal made a quick dash and threw the rider from his back. Unfortunately the man's foot became tightly fastened in the stirrup of the saddle, and he was dragged by the horse's side for some distance.

The farm hands on the Allison farm saw the neighbor's perilous condition, and at once went to the rescue, and with their folks succeeded in halting the frightened beast as it came galloping along in a narrow lane. Mr. Ripka's foot was disengaged from the stirrup, and when examined and questioned it was found that he had received no injuries except a multitude of bruises over his body, none of which was of a serious nature.

The termination of this accident, had it not been for the prompt action of the men referred to, would, without a doubt, have been extremely serious—Centre Reporter.

Susan E. Snyder.

Susan Elizabeth, wife of H. C. Snyder, died Friday at her home at Jersey Shore, of Bright's disease. She had been in very poor health for the past year but had been only a short time in a serious condition. About one year ago the family moved from Cross Fork and took charge of a restaurant near the N. Y. C. passenger station. She was aged 47 years.

Mrs. Snyder is survived by her husband and adopted daughter, Gertie, father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Fravel, two brothers Joe and Irvin, and one sister, Mrs. John DeHaas, all of Blanchard.

The remains were taken to Beech Creek over the N. Y. C. railroad Monday and burial was made at Eagleville.

Through some mistake the body was put off at Mill Hall, and when the train reached Beech Creek a large number of relatives and friends were waiting to receive the body. The trainmen telegraphed the facts to the office at Jersey Shore and a special train was sent to Mill Hall to convey the remains to Beech Creek.

BRICK WORKS FOR BELLEFONTE.

Large Cement Brick Industry May Soon Locate in This Place.

Mr. G. W Hooven, of New Bethlehem representing the McIntosh Brick machines, has been in the city for the past ten days experimenting with the furnace slag here. He has made up several samples of brick from the ground slag. Owing to the high quality of lime used in the manufacture of iron at the Bellefonte furnaces the analysis of the ground slag shows it to contain a large percentage of carbon lime, which has great cement qualities. Therefore by using a very small percentage of Portland cement he finds that he can produce a first class cement brick far superior to sand and cement. When made on the McIntosh machine, which has a pressing power of 90 000 pounds, these brick can be made almost impervious to water. The brick are matured in the open air and are ready for building purposes in six to eight days after passing through the machine.

The making of cement brick is different from that of clay brick as they require no burning, as air and rain is the life of cement brick while it is destructive to clay or sand lime brick Cement brick harden with age and become like a solid piece of granite in time and will last forever. They have greater resistance to fire than any other building brick manufactured. Cement brick have a bright future and the many buildings already constructed through out the country will be monuments to the industry for all time.

Points of superiorty.

1st. It hardens with age.

2nd. Has greater resistance to compression.

3rd. It absorbs moisture to a far less degree than clay or lime brick.

4th. It is a non-conductor of heat.

5th. The brick are perfectly uniform in size and shape, and are never warped.

6th. No brick are wasted; every one manufactured is ready for use.

7th. No scaling off as often occurs with clay or lime brick.

8th. There can be no possible decay or disintegration; they improve with age.

9th. They are not only the best but cheapest.

While cement slag brick are practically unknown in this section we find that they are much used in some of the large cities and especially in New York. The architects there are recommending their use and the plants that are now in operation are running behind with their orders.

It is hoped that sufficient capital can be interested in Bellefonte to establish this industry, which will give employment to a number of men and will increase our industries. There is no limit to the amount of material available for the manufacture of this kind of brick and the quality of the slag here is such that the brick can be manufactured at a less cost than in some places where the slag is mixed with all the dumpings from the furnace.

Boys Off to Camp.

Unusual patriotic interest prevailed in Bellefonte Thursday afternoon, the departure of Company B. Fifth regimen N. G. P., the Fifth regiment bugle crop and the regimental headquarters being the attraction at that time. The boys were busy during the day getting their baggage loaded and making other prepartions. As far as we could learn every man was in the ranks and about 4 30 they marched to the Pennsylvania passenger station to board the train which carried them to Tyrone where they would join the special to convey them to Gettysburg. The train was made up of one stock car for the horses, one baggage car, one gandola car for the ambulance and colonel's buggy, and two day coaches for the members of the company and the regimental staff. The train was run as a special.

The boys were uniformed in their blue shirts, kahki trousers, the new tan shoes, and carried their haversacks, canteen, etc. and rations for the trip. A great many of their friends were at the depot to see them off. They will remain in camp until Saturday of next week.

Hunters Park Attractions.

The Sunday Schools of State College will picnic at Hunter's park July 25th.

The Woodmen of State College will hold their annual reunion at Hunters park Saturday August 1st.

The Crust reunion will be held at Hunters park Saturday August 29th.

FALLING WIRES KILLED MEN

Tenement House Fire in Altoona Causes a Heavy Loss

CAUSED BY ITALIANS.

The Property Loss will Amount to Many Thousands of Dollars and a Number of Families are Homeless.

ELECTRIC WIRES CAUSED TROUBLE.

Altoona was visited by a fire Tuesday evening that resulted in the greatest number of fatalities ever known in the history of the city. The fire was in the big Thomas Weir tenament house Sixth avenue and Fourth street. In its destruction the business establishments of the first floor of the rear section of the building were wiped out, and about one hundred people were rendered homeless and lost their meagre belongings. The monetary loss will amount to about $15.000, but by far the greater loss is the three human lives which were sacrificed in the flames. The dead are:

Harry Deshong, aged 12, son of president of select council, H. E. Deshong.

Joseph Byers, member of Altoona fire department

Joseph Frick, a local Edison electric light lineman.

Deshong was a spectator. The wire fell directly across his neck and was burning his head off in the presence of thousands of people, who could not render assistance. When free from the wire he was taken to the hospital, but died before reaching there. The firemen and lineman were killed instantly

During the early progress of the fire, falling live wires struck the victims. The furnishings of the Italians which were totally ruined, were worth $2,000. Several Italians are reported to have been drinking on the second floor of the building and the fire is supposed to have started there. So far as known the families may all have escaped, but it is feared that some of the number might have been cremated.

The firemen made a hard fight and kept the conflagration within the building.

Fortune in a Handkerchief.

On Wednesday, David Lewis, a wanderer who claims to have no home, appeared at the Williamsport hospital and asked if he could received treatment for a sore leg, stating that he was a poor man and had only three dollars. Of course he was admitted, and when taken to the men's ward his personal property was taken care of by the hospital authorities. His clothes did not look to be of much account but when he turned over his bundle which was wrapped in a bandanna handkerchief he advised them to be careful as it contained valuable papers. When his clothing and personal effects were being put away the bandanna-wrapped package came open and before the astonished eyes of the nurses appeared a pile of crumpled bills, amounting to $1576 in all. The money was placed in a safe together with the three dollars that the man had originally produced and will be kept for him until he leaves the institution. Up to five years ago he lived in Wayne county with his mother, but since her death he has been wandering and working at odd jobs.

Violated Postal Laws.

Postal Inspector Herbert E. Lucas, of Williamsport, went to Shamokin Thursday and interviewed several young men who had been writing love epistles on newspapers and sending the same through the mails by using a one cent stamp. The postal laws provide that all papers, etc., containing writing shall be classed as first class mail and be paid for at that rate.

The youths had written their love messages on the margins of the papers and then mailed the same under the newspaper and periodical rate. For this violation of the law they were made liable to heavy fines or imprisonment. Having acknowledged their error the young men were given their freedom after paying fines.

The inspector stated that this ruling is frequently violated by persons and that the government officials are making a determined effort to break up the practice.

CHRISTOPHER MILLER.

Met With Accident on Railroad Which Cost Him His Life.

The remains of Christopher Miller were brought to Bellefonte on the Bald Eagle Valley train Tuesday evening for burial. Very little could be learned about the manner in which Mr. Miller met with the accident which cost his life. He had been working at the forge at Parkesburg, Chester county, but of late the forge was not in operation, but the men would congregate at the forge in the evening and engage in conversation. When the group broke up Saturday night Mr. Miller was alone and he started from the forge to go to his boarding house passing through the railroad yards. Some time that night the track walker found him along the tracks very badly injured. He was taken to the Coatesville hospital but his injuries were so severe that he died Sunday afternoon about 3.30 o'clock.

The deceased was born in Bellefonte and was aged about 54 years. He was by occupation a forgeman and for some years worked at his trade here. About ten years ago went to Parkesburg, where he has since resided.

His wife preceded him to the grave some years ago, and three children survive: Walter, of Pittsburg; Mrs. Lucy Godfrey, of Washington, D. C., and Mrs. Laura Strunk of Howard. Five brothers also survive: George C., James, R. P., William, Ellsworth, all of Bellefonte.

The funeral was held Wednesday after noon at 2 o'clock, services being conducted in the Evangelical church by Rev. J. F. Hower. Interment was made in the Sunnyside cemetery.

Earnest H. Rothrock.

Ernest H. Rothrock, one of Tyrone's prominent young business men, died at his home in that place Wednesday evening about 9:25 o'clock. Mr. Rothrock had been a sufferer with diabetes for the past two years and all efforts to stay the disease were of no avail. He took his bed on Monday and since that time his condition was alarming and he gradually sank until the end came at the time mentioned.

Ernest Hart Rothrock was born in Bellefonte, September 27, 1869, and at the time of his death he was aged 38 years, 9 months and 18 days. His boyhood and youth were spent in Centre county and he went to Tyrone as a young man to work at his trade as painter. He had lived there during the past twenty years, except for one year spent at Pittcairn. Five years ago he took charge of the grocery store at Logan avenue and Fourteenth street, and he had since conducted it. He also continued at contracting at painting during part of this time. The deceased was a faithful Christian adherent, being a member of the First Presbyterian church. He was also a member of Sinking Spring lodge No. 127, Knights of Pythias; and of the Royal Arcanum and the Modern Woodmen.

On December 5, 1888, Mr. Rothrock was united in marriage to Anna Virginia Funk, at Milesburg. The sorrowing wife survives him, together with two sons and two daughters, William Earl, Robert M., Florence and Mary Helen. He is also survived by two sisters and three brothers, Mrs. C. Weston, of Tyrone; Mrs. W. W. Reed, of Johnsonburg; Herbert Clifford, William and Harold, of Lock Haven.

The funeral services were conducted by Rev. George T. Gunter at 2 30 o'clock Saturday afternoon, at the late home of the deceased. Interment in Grandview cemetery.

Thought They Heard a Panther.

One day this week six Bellefonte young ladies conceived the idea of an outing in the way of a huckleberry party. Accordingly they took their large pails upon their arms and hied themselves off to the vicinity of Point McCoy. Finding a patch where the berries were quite plenty they began picking with hopes of filling their receptacles, After picking for a short time they heard a shrill screaming as if a woman or child was in distress and having heard that the cry of a panther sounded like that of a woman they began to think that one of these blood-thirsty animals was on their trail. Instantly there was a great fluttering of skirts and a rapid departure from the berry patch. After getting safely out of the woods they felt ashamed to go home with only the bottoms of their buckets covered with berries so they resorted to the old trick and filling the buckets with leaves covered them over with the few berries they had gathered. As yet nothing has been seen of the panther.

The party was composed of the following young ladies: Misses Bulah and Hilda Gordon, Grace Alkey, Irene Brandon, Edna Wilson, and Esther Bryan.

PROHIBITION NOMINATIONS

Three Ballots Necessary to get Nominee for President

E. W. CHAFIN NAMED.

Both the Nominees are Candidates for Governor of Probition Tickets in Their Respective States.

SECOND CHOICE FOR VICE PRESIDENT.

Columbus, O., July 16th.—For President, Eugene W. Chafin, of Chicago.

For Vice President—Aaron S. Watkins of Ada, Ohio.

This ticket was nominated today by the prohibitionists national convention and both nominations were made unanimous. The full endorsement of the convention was not, however given to Mr. Chafin until after three ballots had been taken.

On the first two ballots Mr. Chafin did not show a great amount of strength, receiving but 195 out of 1,083 votes on the first and 376 out of 1,087 on the second ballot. His nomination was assured, however, when the roll call began for the third ballot. His own state which had voted largely for Daniel R. Sheen, of Peoria, and the New York delegation followed by those of Indiana and Wisconsin, came over to Mr. Chafin and on the third ballot he received a total of 636 votes.

The strongest competitor of Mr. Chafin was Rev. William B. Palmore, of St. Louis, who received 274 votes on the first ballot and more than 400 on the second.

It was then decided to make Mr. Palmore the vice presidential nominee and he was named by acclamation. He declined to accept the office, however, and persited in his attitude despite the strong urgings of his friends.

Finally it was decided that Professor Aaron S. Watkins, of Ada, O., should be named by acclamation. There was no opposition to him at the moment and Chairman Charles Scanlan was on the verge of declaring Professor Watkins the nominee when delegates in various parts of the hall broke in with a flood of motions, amendments and suspensions of rules.

An extended debate finally resulted in the restoration of the rules and in a ballot for the vice presidency three men were named: Professor Watkins, T. B. Demaree, of Kentucky, and Charles S. Holler, of Indiana. The ballot resulted in the nomination of Professor Watkins by an overwhelming majority and he was immediately thereafter, upon motion of the Kentucky delegates, made the unanimous choice of the convention.

Both the presidential and vice presidential nominees are candidates for governor in their respective states on the prohibition ticket.

Destroy the Cocoons.

Since the caterpillar pest has been causing no end of annoyance in some sections of the state, it will be interesting to know in what manner the fight against the caterpillars is most effectively carried on. City Forester Lewis, of Philadelphia says:

"The most effective work could have been done in early spring if the white egg masses had been scraped from the trees and burned. But in a very short while the caterpillar will be mature and they will then go into the cocoon stage. If the cocoons are torn from the bark and destroyed the second brood of caterpillars will be destroyed, for if the cocoon is destroyed the moth cannot emerge to lay the eggs from which the second brood will hatch.

"We have men busy in the city squares spraying the trees with Paris green and water, but this is not as effective as destroying the egg masses and the cocoons."

The caterpillar pest has not made its appearance in this section yet to any extent, but it should be remembered that they should be warred against at the first appearance. In some places they have become so numerous that the trees are entirely stripped of their foliage. This could be prevented if the cocoons were taken off the trees and burned.

Tested Railroad Capacities.

The officials and crews of the Tyrone division of the Pennsylvania railroad last week conducted some interested tests of the tonnage of the capacity of the Bald Eagle branch with a view to comparison with the tonnage capacity of the Philadelphia and Erie division. To the complete satisfaction of the officials, it was found that their line is fully capable to take care of as much tonnage as the P. & E. with some capacity to spare. The result is important, as it shows that the recent transfer of the tonnage of the Lewistown division to the Tyrone division was well advised and the traffic to western and northern New York will continue to pass over the Bald Valley branch.

Phillipsburg Base Ball Dope.

Tuesday's Philadelphia Inquirer contained the following special correspondance relative to a team from that place wanting to play Tri-State ball:

"It is reported that the Philipsburg team, winners of the pennant of the Mountain League, last year will take over the franchise of one of the Tri-State teams, has been interviewed on the subject and arrangements have been perfected by which the franchise will in a days be turned over to the Philipsburg management.

President Charles H. Rowland, of the Philipsburg team, has been gathering together a fine lot of players for a month or more past of the present season, on the assumption that the Mountain League would this year resume playing and make as good, if not better than last year, when this section of the State was kept in a turmoil of excitement over the games; but the smaller organizations of Osceola, Clearfield, Tyrone and Winburne have dropped out practically when they saw what they would be up against and no hope is now entertained of a local league.

The equipment of the Philipsburg team is so complete in way of large population to draw from, commodious grounds and grand stand, with seating capacity of upwards of four thousand people, that an excellent point is had for Tri-State games. This move on the part of President Rowland will give the people of Osceola, Clearfield, Tyrone, Sandy Ridge and other small towns surrounding this city an opportunity to witness big league base ball. The public are already looking forward to the new games with great expectations, many of whom are willing to back Philipsburg to the finish.

Lightning Strikes Men.

Tuesday's Philipsburg Journal says: Harry and Thomas Fenton, aged respectively 20 and 15 years, sons of John Fenton, and Albert Philips aged 21 years, a son of Samuel Philips, residents of Pleasant Hill, a short distance north west of Philipsburg had a very narrow escape from death by lightning Monday evening.

The young men were returning about 4.30 from their work at Guion mines. The severe storm which came up about that time led them to seek shelter in the barn owned by the father of the Fenton boys instead of going just a little further to the Fenton home. A bolt of lightning struck a wire fence in close proximity to the barn, and current running to a board walk nearby was carried by galvanic pipe under the walk to the barn, striking the boys who were sitting on the steps leading to the barn loft. Harry Fenton was struck in the head and rendered unconscious, becoming delirious about 6.30 and remaing in a condition that required five men to hold him in bed At the hour indicated he became conscious, and while his condition is still serious, there is now hope for his recovery.

Thomas Fenton was burned about the face and fingers, and while having a very close call, was considered out of danger soon after the occurrence, as was the case with Albert Philips, whose one side and foot were burned.

A New Use for Prisoners.

Warden Edward Lewis of the Allegheny County jail, who in addition to being an economist and penologist, is a friend of the laboring man, comes forward with the suggestion that all jail, workhouse and other prisoners in the state should be set to work constructing a magnificent system of highways throughout Pennsylvania. This plan to develop the state by means of prison labor is by no means theoretical. He has devoted time and study to the scheme and is enthusiastic in the matter of having the legislature take up the question and torn as many prisoners who are physically able and who are serving sentence or awaiting trial to work upon the county and state roads.

From a sociological and hygenic point of view Warden Lewis says it would be well to give the jail, workhouse and penitentiary convicts outdoor employment. The work, in his opinion, should be of such a character that it would not conflict with organized labor. By placing prisoners at work on the roads crime would be lessened to a large extent. His practical knowledge of the lawless element, research and knowledge of the condition of the day laborer have caused Warden Lewis to promulgate this prison road project.

Death of a Boy.

Luther, the five-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Green Heaton, who reside at Peru, died Sunday evening about 7.45 o'clock. The boy had been an invalid all his life time, weakness of the heart being the cause of his death.

The funeral was held at 10:30 o'clock Wednesday forenoon, Rev. Stonecypher conducting the services. Interment was made in the Pleasant Gap cemetery.

A Crossed Trail

By CLARISSA MACKIE.

Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

Pink Luscom rode out of the corral with slack rein and drooping head. Care sat upon his broad shoulders and dulled the genial light in his gray eyes. Cummings, seated on the doorstep of the bunk house, hooted derisively at his mate.

"You look like you was goin' a-courtin', Pink," he grinned.

Luscom turned a scowling brow as he slapped the rawboned sorrel with a bronzed hand.

"Drop it!" he growled crustily.

The sorrel struck a long, swinging gait, and presently horse and rider disappeared beyond a rise of ground, only to reappear in gradually diminishing perspective until suddenly they vanished altogether.

"What's the matter with Pink?" asked Rozzy Jones in constrained tones from within the bunk house. "He looks like trouble has got him good and plenty."

Cummings clasped his hands about his knees and rocked to and fro in an ecstasy of delight.

"He's going to see the Widder Todd," he chuckled.

Jones rushed to the door with razor in one hand and a lank cheek lathered from brow to chin. "The Widder Todd!" he gasped. "Why, what's he goin' to see her for?"

"He don't know—she sent for him this mornin'," returned Cummings mirthfully. "I expect Pink overreached himself t'other night at the dance. Miss Hennie Porter, she wouldn't look at Pink all the evenin'. She was dancin' and flirtin' with a long cheeked, flap eared jackass, and poor Pink he set up to the Widder Todd and courted her most particular all the evenin' with one eye on Miss Hennie and you, and I reckon that he said some serious thing to the widder—kinder absent like."

"Widder Todd wouldn't look at Pink Luscom!" snorted Jones irritably.

"Seems like she looked at him considerable t'other night and enjoyed it sufficient to send for him this mornin'," drawled Cummings.

Jones disappeared, and there was the sound of vigorous and renewed scraping of his leathern cheek. Doc Cummings chewed the stem of his pipe reflectively. Presently he craned a curious head toward the interior of the house. "See here, Romeo, if there's anything I can do to help you just you sing out. Shall I catch up a hoss for you?"

"I SAY, ROZZY, YOU AIN'T SORE ABOUT THE WIDDER?"

"Shut up!" retorted Jones in a strangled tone.

"Them there white winged collars is bad for the voice, Rozzy. You sound like you was chokin'. I reckon you'll wear that baby blue crisscross necktie you bought at Widder Todd's store. I hear that baby blue is Miss Hennie's fav'rite color!"

There was no response from within, and presently Jones, attired as gorgeously as Pink Luscom had been a half hour ago, strode haughtily past the man on the doorstep and into the corral, where he proceeded to catch a mount. In a trice he came tearing through the gate on a fiery little black mare, his long legs dangling in close proximity to the burned grass.

He, too, shot a resentful scowl toward the jeering man on the doorstep, and then he disappeared over the rise of ground, his dark figure silhouetted against the copper glory of the evening sky.

"There's Widder Todd a-settin' great store by Rozzy and as mad as a wet hen at him. So she's makin' up to Pink, who's dippy about Miss Hennie. Miss Hennie, she's mad at Pink, and so she flirts desperate with Rozzy, who's made at the widder. And they're all mad and jealous of one another, and if somebody don't shake 'em up there's bound to be some more mismated marriages in Seven Forks. O Lordy!" Cummings filled his pipe and lounged over to the cook house and joined a social group about the fire.

Rozzy Jones did not look at the copper glory of the sunset. With moody eyes fixed on the well worn trail, he noted reluctantly the diminishing miles that lay between him and the crossroads. Here, instead of pursuing his customary course toward the town and the domicile of the fascinating widow, he must turn to the right and take the cross trail to Porter's, where Miss Hennie awaited him and would appear to be disappointed, after all, when he did come.

There had been several calls such as this one was destined to be, and he frankly confessed to himself that Miss Hennie bored him. Now, the widow Jones swore softly and dug a spurred heel into the little mare's flank. There was an onward rush, and he came upon the crossroads with a scatter of loose gravel and flying hoofs.

Seated on the back of a rawboned sorrel was Pink Luscom. His very attitude suggested indecision. The sorrel's head was turned toward the town, while Pink's gray eyes gazed wistfully up the cross trail which led to Porter's. His frown deepened as Jones drew his horse to a standstill and glared aggressively at him.

Jones broke the silence at last.

"'Pears like you'd lost the trail!" he sneered, heading his beast up the cross trail.

Pink winced. A dark red settled down over his bronzed face.

"I reckon I can find it without any help from you," he drawled.

"I ain't seen you tryin' to do it!" cried Jones tantalizingly.

"Mebbe I don't want to. The trail to Seven Forks ain't a bad one."

"You don't seem in no hurry to take it!" snapped Jones.

Luscom's hand sought his hip. "I reckon we might as well have it out now," he said calmly.

"I'd be plum glad to oblige you!"

Jones had whipped out a weapon and wheeled his horse about.

"I'd like to shake first, Rozzy," said Luscom gravely, holding out a big brown paw.

Jones grasped it eagerly. "We've been good friends up to now, Pink," he said regretfully, "and I'm sorry it's come to this, but when two fellers cross each other's trail, why"— He paused and looked past his rival toward the town.

Luscom was staring at him furiously, and then a strange light broke over his good looking face.

"I say, Rozzy, you ain't sore about the widder?"

"What do you think?" Jones stared defiantly at the other man. "Miss Hennie, she's all right. But she and me don't set no great store by each other. She says come, and the widder says go, so there ain't nothin' for a feller to do."

Luscom was lighting a cigarette with trembling fingers. "There's only one thing to do, Rozzy Jones," he said solemnly. "Just don't cross my trail, and I won't cross yours. The widder, she don't want to talk about nothin' but Rozzy, while Miss Hennie and me uster hit it off first rate, and I reckon if you'll just move aside I'll pike along up to Porter's."

Jones grinned happily as they passed one another, and just as each disappeared in a cloud of dust along his own particular trail two brown hands were waved in friendly farewell.

* * * * * * *

When he heard the news Dock Cummings waved a deprecating hand.

"What else could you expect from fellers what wore white wing collars and crisscross baby blue neckties?" he asked.

All He Lacked.

A pitcher belonging to a professional baseball club, who thought he was not getting his share of the limelight of publicity, went one day to the captain and manager to make his "kick." Being of a somewhat choleric disposition, which had got him into trouble more than once, he spoke with feeling.

"Cap," he said, "you're not giving me a square deal, and you know it."

"What's the matter, Bill?"

"You know what's the matter, cap. I haven't been in the box for three weeks. You know I can play ball. I've got every outcurve, inshoot, upshoot and drop there is in the business. I've got everything that any other pitcher has. I can put on speed, and I can send 'em in slow. I can get 'em right over the plate every time I want to. Haven't I got as good control of the ball as any fellow you know of?"

"Yes, Bill," said the captain, "you have. When you get as good control of your temper as you have of the ball I'll use you, all right. Don't you be uneasy about that, Bill."

Bill went away deep in thought, and it was not very long after that conversation that he "got into the game" again.—Youth's Companion.

Two Ugly Snakes.

These two snakes, the hamadryad and the cobra, cause the great annual death roll of India from snake bite, about 22,000 people last year. One reason for this great death roll is that Hindoos and Buddhists will not kill the snakes, as it is against their religion to take life. The cobra will go away from you usually, except in the nesting season, and then he will attack you on sight if you disturb him or his mate. It is at this time that so many deaths take place among the Malays and Siamese, as it is coincident with the rice planting season, and the peasants are busily at work in the rice fields. The cobra will bite under water, and many people are bitten on the foot or heel while planting rice. Death usually takes place in an hour or less. I have known a large buffalo to be bitten and die in fifteen minutes. It must have been bitten directly in a vein.

Too Much Music.

"I like churches to provide fine music at all times," said a prominent clergyman, "but there are cases on record where the music has been given too prominent a place.

"An eloquent brother divine from South Carolina once told me that going to preach at a strange church he was taken aside by a deacon, who whispered:

"'Beg pardon, sir, but I must ask you not to preach longer than ten or twelve minutes. It's the music that the people come here for.'

"That was wrong. But worse still was the case of a supply preacher in a church famous for its anthems and choruses. The stranger, not noticing the scraping and tuning of fiddles, rose and began to preach, when the choir leader jumped up and shouted angrily to him from the choir loft at the other end of the church:

"'Sit down, man! When it's your turn we'll tell you.'"

Wagner's Portrait.

When Wagner was in England supervising the first production of his operas, the music enthusiasts commissioned the artist Herkomer to paint the musician's portrait, but Wagner was dashing about in such a state of frenzy that he repelled impatiently every attempt to get him to give a "sitting." Still, Herkomer stuck to him like a limpet, fed with him, walked and talked with him, watched him conduct his orchestra, write music and read books. At last, when every attempt to secure a "sitting" had failed, Herkomer rose early one morning, painted with frenzied speed all day, spent a short night in restless sleep, rose early again and painted furiously, till on the second evening he sat down exhausted—but with his picture finished. Wagner was called in and threw up his hands in amazement. "Ah!" he cried. "Wonderful! That is exactly how I would like to look if I could."

Mr. Spurgeon once complained that his deacons were worse than the devil.

"Resist the devil," said he, "and he will fly from you, but resist a deacon and he will fly at you."

The Champion Talk Man.

From Lincoln, Nebraska, come the information that Bryan has been making some calculation, by request, on the amount of talk he indulged in since he took up office-seeking as a life work in 1896.

Mr. Bryan, it is said, estimates roughly that each year he has delivered 250 speeches, traveled 25,000 miles, spoken on an average half an hour each time, and that his audience have averaged 1,000 persons. The totals that result from these figures are enormous. They show that including his trip around the world in 1906, Mr. Bryan has traveled 300,000 miles since his first defeat for President, has addressed 3,000,000 people, has spoken 3,000 times, and has talked 1,5000 hours, or a little more than 62 days, which is two full calendar

The New York Sun carries the computation still further and adds:

"If Mr. Bryan has spoken 1,500 hours in all in twelve years he has spoken 90,000 minutes, and assuming that his average enunciation per minute is 200 words, his entire output must be approximately 18,000,000 words."

PHYSICIANS INJURED

MACHINE RAN AWAY

Two Doctors on way to Perform an operation were Themselves Placed in the Hospital.

THE MAYOR RENDERS ASSISTANCE

Dr. S. S. Koser and wife, Dr. Williamee Koser, of Williamsport, Sunday afternoon when on their way to Hillsgrove to perform an operation were themselves placed on the hospital list by a serious automobile accident. Dr. Williamee Koser was severely injured, while Dr. S. S. Koser also suffered considerably, but not to the extent that his wife did. She sustained a fracture of the pelvis.

The automobile was on a hill about three miles above Loyalsockville, near Hemlock Inn, when Dr. S. S. Koser cranked it. As he was in the act of cranking the machine on the hill it got away, ran up the bank at the side of the road and then turned turtle, falling back on Dr. Williamee Koser.

Dr. R. H. Born, of Montoursville, was camping nearby, George Weaver, owner of Hemlock Inn, and brother, of Montoursville, were at the Inn and they with Dr. Born carried the injured woman to the hill, where she was made as comfortable as possible. Dr. S. S. Koser had an injury to his right hand and to his head, besides numerous bruises, but he was able to move around following the accident.

When an auto was 'phoned for, following the accident, there was no large one in the garage, except Mayor Wolfe's of Williamsport and he promptly volunteered to go to Hemlock Inn to render his service.

State Orchard Work.

Pursuant of a plan launched in this State this year to demonstrate to the growers of fruit trees in either door-yards or orchards the utility of applying modern orchard methods in the cultivation and pruning of the trees and in the control of insect pests and plant diseases a meeting will be held in the hall or chapel of the Huntingdon Industrial Reform School at 1:30 p. m., Thursday July 23, and in the orchard at 2:30 p. m. of the same day. Hon. N. B. Critchfield, Secretary of Agriculture, Prof. H. A. Surface, Economic Zoologist, James Bergy, Orchard Inspector and Demonstrator, and W. E. Grove, Orchard Demonstrator, each prominent in agricultural or horticultural work, will be in attendance.

State work in the school orchard was begun with a pruning demonstration, March 26, 1908, followed with subsequent demonstrations for control of scale insects and of codling moth, and co-incidentally of plant diseases.

Such interest is shown by the fruit growers' of the county in the results obtained that this meeting seems especially timely.

All persons who are interested in the care of fruit trees are cordially invited to attend.

Penance For Discourtesy.

Nicholas I., czar of Russia, was the type of an absolute aristocrat. The succession of terrible wars which clouded his reign did not tend to soften his disposition or to render him less imperious. But, rough and harsh as he was, Nicholas had a measure of chivalry in his disposition. He would not tolerate under any circumstances an insult offered to a woman. As the czar was driving through the streets of St. Petersburg he caught sight of an officer of his household in the act of upsetting an old beggar woman whose hands were raised in a prayer for alms. The official was quite unmindful of the august witness of his act and was rather pleased when, a few hours later, he was summoned to the imperial presence. Nicholas soon undeceived him and in the presence of a dozen courtiers cut him to the quick with his indignant reproof.

"Enough!" said Nicholas finally. "You will walk up and down that corridor all night, and every time you turn you will say in a loud voice: 'I am a puppy! I am a puppy.'"

Carried Out Instructions.

Every sailor has his story of the mistakes which landlubbers make over the names of things at sea, which always seem to be exactly the opposite of what they are on land.

A new boy had gone on board a West India ship, upon which a painter had also been employed to paint the ship's side. The painter was at work upon a staging suspended under the ship's stern.

The captain, who had just got into a boat alongside, called out to the new boy, who stood leaning over the rail, "Let go the painter!"

Everybody should know that a boat's painter is the rope which makes it fast, but this boy did not know it. He ran aft and let go the ropes by which the painter's staging was held. Meantime the captain was wearied with waiting to be cast off.

"You rascal!" he called. "Why don't you let go the painter?"

"He's gone, sir," said the boy briskly. "He's gone—pots, brushes and all!" —London Standard.

She Wanted to Know.

A little woman with wilton carpet floral designs on her hat came into the uptown Pennsylvania ticket office the other day and bought a ticket for a point down the state.

She gathered up her ticket and asked for a little folder because it had a picture on it in colors of a girl waving goodby to somebody from the end of a train. Then she placed her ticket inside her purse and the purse inside a little satchel and put the satchel inside her shopping bag, which she carried in a small alligator traveling bag. Just before she started out she inquired of City Passenger Agent Dillon, who had been waiting on her, "How long before my train starts?"

"You'll just about have time to make it," Dillon told her. "It leaves the Union station in about seventeen minutes."

"Seventeen minutes," she repeated, "and is that by central time or eastern time?"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"The Greatest Widower."

This is said to be the title of a genuine essay evolved some years ago by a boy in a Welsh board school:

"King Henry VIII. was the greatest widower that ever lived. He was born at Anno Domini in the year 1066. He had 510 wives besides children. The first was beheaded and executed. The second was revoked. She never smiled again. But she said the word 'Calais' would be found on her heart after her death. The greatest man in this reign was Lord Sir Garret Wolsey. He was sir named the Boy Bachelor. He was born at the age of 15, unmarried. Henry VIII. was succeeded on the throne by his great-grandmother, the beautiful and accomplished Mary, queen of Scots, sometimes known as the Lady of the Lake!"

Helping the Burglar Out.

"John," she whispered, "there's a burglar in the drawing room. He has just knocked against the piano and hit several keys at once."

"I'll go down," said he.

"Oh, John, don't do anything rash!"

"Rash! Why, I'm going to help him. You don't suppose he can remove the piano from the house without assistance!"—London Throne.

An Omission.

Magistrate—What is the charge against you this time? Boggs—They cotched me a-stealing oranges, yer worship. Magistrate—Didn't I tell you when you were here before not to steal anything more? Boggs—No, yer worship; you said not to steal any more lemons, but yer didn't say a word about oranges.—London Graphic.

Making It Simple.

In the course of his sermon a preacher in a rural district used the world phenomenon. This word caused one of the members some trouble, for he was unable to attach any meaning to it. Finally he determined to seek an explanation from the minister and at the close of the service approached him on the subject.

"What did yer mean by that there long word yer used in yer sermon?" he began.

"Oh, I see you do not know what a phenomenon is," replied the minister. "Well, have you ever seen a cow grazing in a field in which thistles were growing?"

"Yes; many a time."

"That is not a phenomenon. And no doubt you have often listened to a lark singing merrily away up in the clouds."

"Yes."

"That, again, is not a phenomenon. But if you saw that cow sitting on a thistle singing like a lark that would be a phenomenon."—Liverpool Mercury.

Kadiak Island's Queer Climate.

Of the abnormal climate of Kadiak island, Alaska, a writer says: "In spite of its situation in such high latitudes we find here what may well be described as 'the parting of the ways' between the arctic and more temperate regions. For, thanks to the moderating influence of the Japanese current which flows along its southern coasts, Kadiak is favored with climatic conditions such as are unknown even in places a few miles north or east of it on the mainland of Alaska. So pronounced is the demarcation line that even on the island itself a traveler in summer will suddenly emerge from amid forests and vegetation of almost tropical luxuriance into a barren, desolate land of silence, where lofty snow capped mountains tower aloft, brooding, as it were, over the past terrors of an arctic winter, which will soon descend once more, enveloping them in its icy grip."

The English Channel.

One of the most famous bits of water in the world is the English channel which separates and yet unites the sister countries of England and France and has been the scene of so much of their history. It extends on the English side from Land's End to Dover and on the French side from the island of Ushant to Calais. Its entrance from the German ocean is the strait of Dover, twenty-one miles wide, while at the other extremity, where it joins the Atlantic, it is 100 miles from shore to shore. The greatest width midway is 150 miles. Owing to the strong currents setting in from the westward, the high winds which frequently prevail and the configuration of the shores it has a roughness which has become proverbial and few cross it without seasickness.

It Would Flatter Man.

Few men have deserved and few have won higher praise in an epitaph than the following, which was written by Lord Byron on the tomb of his dog Newfoundland:

"Near this spot are deposited the remains of one who possessed beauty without vanity, strength without insolence, courage without ferocity and all the virtues of man without his vices. This praise, which would be unmeaning flattery if inscribed over human ashes, is but a just tribute to the memory of Boatswain, a dog, who was born at Newfoundland May 3, 1803, and died at Newstead abbey Nov. 18, 1808."

EDITORIAL.

Additional Locals.

THE election of Mr. Taft and a Republican Congress will do more than anything else to restore confidence to this nation.

THE railroad managers who want to advance rates are no doubt of the school which demands all the traffic will bear. But suppose the traffic won't bear it.

THIS is the way Mr. Dooley predicts the election of Mr. Taft: "It takes all kinds of men to make up a Democratic party—and then there aren't enough.

IT is reasonably safe to predict that the next president will be a man who has circumnavigated the globe, that his name is William, and that he never ran for office before.

THE BETSY ROSS STORY.

The Betsy Ross story about the making of the American flag is fittingly defended and the rude denier of it justly rebuked by the Lancaster Daily Examiner in these words: "If we take away some of the pleasing myths of history there would be a very dry skelton left. Suppose there was no William Tell, a John Smith-Pocohontas episode, the leaping of Curtius into the chasm that gaped in Rome or a Horatius to keep the bridge—let us keep them as the symbolic evidence of the bravery and patriotism of r people. Our dry as-dust old fossilized antiquaries are becoming great bores in killing our fine and long established traditions in the interest of accuracy. Now somebody made the first American flag and the honor has long been given to one Betsy Ross. Why exchange now to some one equally obscure on account of an accuracy that does no good. It is of no great moment who made the first flag, as it adds nothing to the lesson of history. Yet one Wm. J. Campbell, who seems to have no other claim to fame, is trying to wipe our Betsy off the map of history. But for all that, let us keep on revering her as we do William Tell or any well established traditions of history that does no harm, even if untrue."

PENNSYLVANIA ROADS.

A crowd of automobile tourists, stopping over at Harrisburg on the way from Pittsburg to Philadelphia, gave Governor Stuart occasion for a timely talk upon good roads. Speaking for Pennsylvania, the Governor could not point with pride to the present condition of the roads over which the cars had come. Yet it ought to be remembered for the honor of the State, that there were in their day, among the very first "good roads" in the country They have fallen into decay because the energies of the State have been so largely devoted to more modern lines of transportation.

Pennsylvania, in the early part of the last century, led all of the States in the construction of turnpike roads. Some of the work was directly under public supervision, but most of the turnpikes leading out of Philadelphia—of which the Lancaster road was the type—and those co stituting the great highway over the Alleghenies to the Ohio were built by corporations, under State charter, to which the State and the counties and townships subscribed more or less of the capital. Most of these turnpikes were of rudimentary construction, but some of them were on a par with the best that had been built, and they sufficiently met the requirements of the laborious traffic of the day.

The turnpike system, however, was still but partially developed when the State began a more ambitious system of public works in the canals that were to join the Ohio with the Delaware and to make navigable the Susquehanna and the Schuylkill. This great enterprise, in its turn, was checked by the competition of the yet more modern railroads, whose construction and development absorbed so much of both public and private capital and energy that the canals were starved into decay and turnpikes ceased to be regarded as a serious investment or as entitled to any public consideration at all.

Whether or not our "internal waterways" can ever be profitably revived, their practical abandonment is generally recognized as a mistake. It is still more widely recognized that both the general and local neglect of common roads has been disastrous to the Commonwealth. They have been neglected so long and so completely, except in a few conspicuous instances, that Pennsylvania can now apologize for them only by turning back to the record of a hundred years ago when turnpikes were still regarded as important, and can regain the credit she then earned only by some such means as were then employed—the systematic construction of improved modern roads under State supervision and with State aid.—philadelphia Ledger.

COMMENTING on the annual encampment of the National Guard of the state at Gettysburg this week, the Erie Times says: "The annual encampment of the National Guard is an event whose importance is not properly rated by the average citizen. He is apt to look upon it as a summer "lark." As a matter of fact the encampment is an event for work, not play. The citizen soldiery is being placed on constantly higher plane. The National Guard is being given the opportunity to become of real, practical advantage to the nation, and the opportunity is being improved. Time was not so long ago when the National Guard were referred to as "petticoat soldiers," and were regarded as a type of the soldier dandies. All this is passing. The men who make the National Guard of the present are men in serviceable suits of khaki, made for wear and tear and dirt and grime, men who look upon soldiering as a business, who while they are keenly alive to every opportunity for a "good time" have passed the point where recreation is deemed the one and only object for enlisting in the citizen soldiery."

PENNSYLVANIA eyes are turned to Gettysburg this week. Ten thousand citizen soldiers are camping on the famous field and will perfect themselves in discipline and knowledge in a place where memories inspire to patriotic service.

THE IDIOCY OF PROFANITY.

The Railway Carmen's Journal in its current issue has quite a timely and sensible editorial on the uselessness of profanity, and wants to know if it serves any good purpose at all in the scheme of things under which this old world's civilization is progressing. The answer is easy. There is no possible good that ever comes of profanity. It is a senseless, indecent, coarse, and vulgar habit; its practice should be abhorred by every individual in this world claiming in the remotest degree to be a gentleman. There are occasions, perhaps, when outbursts of explosive language may be reasonable expected on the part of average human beings. The best regulated men get mad at times, and give vent to emphatic expressions. There is, in its last analysis, very little that may be said to justify even that; but human nature has its limitations and the transgresion now and then, while it may not be excusable, is, at least natural.

SENATOR HARTE, who introduced at Albany a bill against the sale and manufacture of cigarets, said at a recent banquet: "Medicine is the art of amusing the patient while nature cures the disease" Hypochondriacs, for instance.

IT was very wrong of that western man to kill himself because he could not play the piano well. But we think that there are some people in the east who think they can play who might be subjected to a somewhat milder discipline of life with advantage to the neighbors.

Woman's Home Companion For August.

The August issue of Woman's Home Companion is full of delightful stories—just the right sort of mid-summer reading. Just to pick up the magazine and look at the little dutch boy and the wind mill on the cover makes you feel cool and comfortable. Then, when you open the magazine, you come across enough stories and entrancing illustrations to give you enjoyment for the entire month.

Some of the authors are Temple Bailey, Juliet Wilbor Tompkins, Marion Hill, Ruth Wilson Herrick, May Isabel Fisk, Clinton Dangerfield and Harvey J. O'Higgins. And when we tell you that these stories are illustrated by Orson Lowell, Alice Barber Stephens, Charlotte Weber-Ditzler and other famous, artists, you will appreciate what a treat this summer magazine has in store for you.

There are serious and practical things, too. Doctor Hale talks helpfully about "Sleep and Re-Creation." "The Garden in August," many recipes for summer salads, meats and substitutes for meats by Fannie Merrit Farmer and Christine Terhune Herrick, the Summer Fashions by Grace Margaret Gould, Sam Loyd's Own Puzzle Page, are a few of the things that will interest most every woman who reads the August Woman's Home Companion.

Grangers Planning for Big Fair.

The Grangers are making preparations for a big fair to be held at Dell Delight park, near Altoona, on Sept. 29 and 30 and Oct. 1 and 2. A large amount of work has already been done for accommodation of the exhibits. A large exhibit building has been built, as have also seventy-five cattle pens and a large chicken shed.

Two of the features of the fair will be the cattle exhibit and horse racing, $1000 having set aside for prizes in the cattle exhibit and $2500 for racing prizes. A novel feature of the fair will be an airship exhibition every day. The president is now communicating with several owners of flying machines and it is likely that Prof. Baldwin will be secured. Thursday October 1 will be Altoona day and noted speakers will be present on that day.

Dog Days And The Boys.

Some of the old time Dog Day beliefs are recounted in one of our exchanges as follows:

The "dog days" have arrived. They sneaked quietly in last Saturday. If you don't believe it consult Baer's Lancaster county almanac, the old, reliable authority on all climate matters in this yicinity. Among the things that mothers are now cautioning their growing sons against are these: Don't go swimming during the "dog days," you'll get boils if you do; don't pet strange dogs, they're liable to be mad during the "dog days;" stay out of the heat as much as possible, you're likely to have a sun-stroke during the "dog days;" look out for snakes, they're worse than usual during the "dog days." And young American will go out about his business just the same as if there were no "dog days" and he will be no worse for them when they are over.

A Daughter of Vesuvius.

By Pierce Vincent.

Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

It was a small two edged stiletto that Zabetta Gemella bought at Antonio Mordo's shop in Naples, a very tiny plaything of a stiletto; but, as every Italian knows, the heart lies barely two inches below the surface and a blade that will reach that distance is long enough for all practical purposes.

On the crucifix handle of this particular stiletto Zabetta had sworn that it should drink the blood of either Caesar Pino or of his betrothed, Maria Vincente.

They were a very ancient family, the Gemellas. One ancestor had escaped from the eruption that overwhelmed Pompeii and another had been mummified at Herculaneum. The race had a certain fierce sturdiness inherited from some lava born forefather before Romulus.

They also had an unpleasant mediaeval habit of keeping their oaths regardless of consequences, as family traditions and court records bore witness. They took life seriously, as many had found to their cost.

So when people heard that Caesar Pino had thrown over Zabetta Gemella for Maria Vincente they shook their heads. Zabetta herself went home, dry lipped and fiery eyed, and at midnight swore the sibylline blood oath, a strange and terrible curse intrusted to her by the muttering old crone, her grandmother.

Zabetta dwelt in the outskirts of Boscotrase on the slopes nearest Vesuvius. Her first view at dawn from her little attic was of the purple plume and mighty shoulders of the great volcano heaved against the sky, and her last glimpse at night was of the same plume streaming wildly across the sunset. She knew the mountain in all its moods and from its nature shaped her own. Its heart of fire was no wilder than that within her breast.

Caesar Pino belonged to the aristocracy of Boscotrase. His olive trees were the best in the place, and did not the choicest Lachryma Christi come from his grapes grown on the scoriae of Vesuvius? Caesar was dark and handsome, a fine singer and dancer, a hard worker, a good fellow all round. All the girls in the village were in love with him.

Handsome Caesar fell in love with handsomer Zabetta. True, her family was poor. But what difference did that make? Caesar had enough for both. Their betrothal soon followed. Nobody could deny that they made a fine looking pair. To be sure, some families whose daughters would not have objected to occupying Zabetta's place hinted privately at the record of the Gemellas. But none spoke openly, remembering that same record.

All went well until Maria Vincente came to Boscotrase. Then Caesar's affection for Zabetta cooled. Not that Maria deliberately did anything to tempt the young man away. But it soon became known through the town that Caesar and his sweetheart had quarreled; next, that he was betrothed to Maria.

Then, indeed, people shook their heads and some said, "Poor Zabetta!"

But others, who knew her family's record better, said, "Poor Caesar!"

And everybody waited to see what would happen.

It was the next day after the break that Zabetta bought the dagger. The Gemellas always acted promptly. But she found it difficult to decide whose blood the sharp point should drink.

Sometimes she felt it would be Caesar's, sometimes Maria's, and on one black day when the two passed her arm in arm she determined that it should be both and she had hard work to restrain herself from putting the sentence into immediate execution.

Then came the great eruption.

For generations Vesuvius, muttering and grumbling, had looked down on the presumptuous vineyards and olive groves, boldly pressing nearer the region where it had decreed no living thing should grow. Unheeded it had given warning after warning, like a cross old man who is continually making threats, but whom no one takes at his word.

At last the giant that dwelt in the mountain's fiery heart decided that it was time to teach the forgetful race of men one lesson more. So pouf! He blew off the cone and descended in streams of lava and sheets of ashes.

Boscotrase as one of the worst sufferers. For a time its citizens hoped they might escape with a shower of stones and cinders. But one night the scarlet ribbons that had been trickling like rivers of blood down the rough slopes turned toward the village and flight was the only resource.

In a few hours Caesar had seen his vineyard and olive grove damaged beyond hope of reparation in his own lifetime. From a wealthy man he had become poor. Although he did not notice it, Maria's affection had cooled perceptibly from the moment when she realized that her lover was now no richer than his fellows.

Zabetta was gloomily preparing to flee from her home at the coming of the lava. To her whether she escaped or not mattered very little. The cataclysm without found a responsive echo in her heart, fiery, scorched and blasted.

With a small bundle of her belongings she was hurrying along the street amid the ashes and falling stones when a pale faced, shrieking figure rushed past her.

Zabetta's hand involuntarily sought her bosom, whence lurked the stiletto. She was alone with her hated rival. In that fearful semimidnight who would know if she slew Maria?

The other shrank back, seeing her stern face and guessing the import of her bosomed hand.

"Where is Caesar?" grimly questioned Zabetta. Maria cowered away.

"I left him at his house a little while ago. The lava was coming. As he entered to get a bundle the walls fell and buried him. I dared not go in He is dead."

"Coward!" hissed Zabetta. Dropping her load, she gave the shrinking girl a push that hastened her flight, then flew back through the lurid gloom along the well known way that led to Caesar's house. Why she went she did not know. Caesar was dead to her, so her heart whispered. Yet instinct told her to hasten back.

Soon she saw the ruined house. Only a few rods away a red stream was rolling slowly down the street. She entered the tottering walls and beheld a prone figure partly buried under the fallen stones.

It was Caesar!

The peril of her former lover made Zabetta forgetful of her own danger and of the fact that he was the betrothed of another woman. Madly she tore with bleeding fingers at the debris that covered him. His heart was beating; he was alive. With strength increased tenfold she tugged at the wreckage until she had cleared away everything but a heavy block that pressed down the little finger of his right hand. This block resisted Zabetta's utmost efforts.

It was growing hotter and hotter. A few minutes more and the lava would engulf the house. Death would be the portion of any living thing herein. Zabetta drew her tiny dagger.

At that instant Caesar returned to consciousness. Seeing her bending over him, knife in hand, he gave a cry of terror and appeal and swooned again just as the blade descended. It severed his crushed finger at the second joint and he was free.

There was not a second to lose. Already the air was scorching. With a man's strength Zabetta lifted the insensible Caesar in her arms and carried him out into the street. Through the showers of ashes she staggered with her burden. She had not got fifty feet from the door when the lava boiled against the walls and the whole house fell in ruins.

But Caesar was saved!

So Zabetta kept her vow, sworn on the crucifix of the little dagger, that it should drink the blood of either Caesar or Maria. And it was probably the first instance on record where the fulfillment of a Gemella's blood oath resulted in a marriage.

Too Complicated.

Modern household improvements are appreciated by the initiated, but to the unenlightened they sometimes prove discouraging. Mrs. Gordon was showing Ina, the new maid, who had agreed to work for $4 a week, the conveniences of her up to date kitchen.

"It's a very easy place," explained the lady, "because I have so many contrivances for making the work light.

"Now, here's a new patent bread mixer. When you're ready to use it I'll show you how to put it together And this is a splendid meat grinder It saves hours of labor with the chopping knife. Here is a fine apple parer that takes the cores out too. And this hardwood slab is a wonderful potato slicer.

"Then," continued Mrs. Gordon proudly, "I have a patent dishwasher, a percolating coffeepot and an automatic ash sifter."

"Meesis," said Ina firmly, "eef I is to spend all mys time learning how to make dose fonny t'ings go I must hov t'ree dollar a mont' more. She vor too moch vork."—Youth's Companion.

The Constitution.

The first draft of the constitution contained an enumeration of the states by name after the word "people"—as "We, the people of New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Virginia"—but it became impossible to retain this form after the adoption of the seventh and last article, which provided that the ratification by nine states should be sufficient to establish the constitution as between them, and for the plain reason that it was impossible to determine whether all the states would ratify or, if they failed, which they would be; or, if nine should ratify, how to designate them. No alternative was thus left but to omit the enumeration and to insert in its place "United States."—New York American.

An Honest Doctor Advised Peruna.

SYLVESTER E. SMITH.

Robust Health Ruined.

MR. SYLVESTER E. SMITH, Room 218, Granite Block, St. Louis, Mo., writes: "Peruna is the best friend a sick man can have.

"A few months ago I came here in a wretched condition. Exposure and dampness had ruined my once robust health. I had catarrhal affections of the bronchial tubes, and for a time there was a doubt as to my recovery.

The Sick Man's Friend.

"My good honest old doctor advised me to take Peruna, which I did and in a short time my health began to improve very rapidly, the bronchial trouble gradually disappeared, and in three months my health was fully restored.

"Accept a grateful man's thanks for his restoration to perfect health."

C. and C. has Three Shut Outs.

Three of the four games played by the teams of the Centre and Clinton League on Saturday were shut outs. The winners were the teams heading the list and the losers were the teams with the smaller percentages. Orvis now has a strong lead over the other teams but the season is not yet over and several of the teams are following them At Mill Hall the home team failed to score from the Red Roses of Beech Creek, while the latter made the whitewash a good one with seven runs.

Howard was the only losing team that scored a run in any of Saturday's games. Shay seemed easily hit by the Mountaineers who scored 12 runs and gave the Millionaires only 7. Snow Shoe having taken two games from Woolrich broke the tie between the Millionaires and the Coal Barons.

While the Coal Barons succeeded in whitewashing the Woolpickers twice and they did it by very small scores in each game. In the first game they scored three runs and in the second the Woolpickers held them down to two runs.

Man-hole Cap Blew Off

The shirt factory was obliged to shut down Monday morning on account of an accident to the boiler and which might have been more serious had it happened later in the day. In the morning when Ellis Stine, the fireman, was getting up steam the man-hole cap blew off the the boiler, but fortunately no one was near that part of the boiler house. The steam pressure at the time was only about twenty pounds and it was fortunate that the accident happened before it reached a high pressure. The boiler inspector had been there only last Thursday and pronounced everything in good condition, having taken the cap off to inspect the boiler inside. It is the opinion that the cap was cracked and it easily gave way under the light pressure. As soon as a new cap is received from Williamsport he factory will resume.

Spring Mills.

I was somewhat amused a day or two since at some farmers who were examining the spray pump and white washer, for which W. W. Brady of our town is the sole agent, when one old farmer remarked that he had very grave doubts about the machine white washing anything, to say nothing about white washing a barn in the time stated, at I events he would wager the price of it, that his barn and it was only an ordinary one, could not be white washed if at all, in twice the time, Mr. Brady promptly accepted the wager, and both gentlemen immediately repaired to the farm to settle the matter, followed by eight or ten others, your correspondent among the number. The barn was 45 by 36 feet and was to be white washed in an hour. After waiting some time for the wash to be put in proper condition Mr. Brady commenced operation and without any apparent efforts completed the job in 53 minutes by the watch. The farmer after looking around the barn amid the laughter of those present, freely acknowledged that he was mistaken, and added, oh! you fellows may laugh, you all just thought as I did, but you see we were all wrong. I am satisfied that I nor any of you fellows could white wash that barn as well in half a day, I lost but now I'll buy a machine, of course Mr. Brady declined accepting the wager, as he only wanted to prove that his statement was correct. As a result of the white washing operation Mr. Brady disposed of seven machines before leaving the grounds.

Miss Bertha Steely and Miss Myrtle Foreeman of Sunbury, are here visiting relatives and friends in the valley, guests of Mrs. C. C. Cummings.

T. B. Jamison has about finished his new barn, erected in the site of the one destroyed by fire in the spring. It is quite an imposing building.

We had quite a lively hail shower here one day last week, but no damage is reported.

Our farmers have about all the wheat in the barns, the crop is a very large one.

Bryan seems to satisfy the Democrats in this Gibraltar of Democracy.

To judge from the activity of the several committees the Dr. P. M. Wolf second reunion on the 6th of August will be an immense affair.

W. H. Meyer, our meat merchant, bought a pair of high spirited horses a week or two ago, and to introduce themselves and prove who was boss, one of the animals kicked Mr. Meyer on his left limb so severely that he was housed for several days.

In this section of Penns valley, corn, oats, potatoes and apples never looked more promising. The crop will evidently be a large one.

Berries of all kinds are very plentiful in this neighborhood. The mountains and hills are crowded with huckleberries.

Politics are very quiet here just now, to warm to discuss anything but comfort and ice cream.

C. M. PARRISH UNUSUAL OFFER.

Sell Dr. Howard's Specific at Half-Price, and Guarantee a Cure.

"It isn't often that we have faith enough in the medicine put up by other people to be willing to offer to refund the money if it does not cure," said C. M. Parrish to a Daily News man who dropped into his store, "but I am glad to sell Dr. Howard's specific for the cure of constipation and dyspepsia on that basis.

"The Dr. Howard Company, in order to get a quick introductory sale, authorizes us to sell their regular fifty cent bottles at half-price, 25 cents, and, although we have sold a lot of it, and have guaranteed every package, not one has been brought back as unsatisfactory. There are sixty doses in a vail that can be carried in the vest pocket or purse, and every one has more medicinal power than a big pill or tablet or a tumbler of mineral water.

"I am still selling the specific at half-price, although I cannot tell how long I shall be able to do so, and anyone who is subject to constipation, sick headache dizziness, liver trouble, indigestion or a general played out condition, ought to take advantage of this chance.

Short Tickets.

"Literally speaking," remarked the statistical man, "the democratic and republican tickets, taken together or singly, man for man, are the shortest ever put before the country. Nine letters are enough for the democratic candidates, eleven for the republicans, and singularly enough, the same figures apply when the presidential and vice presidential candidates are taken into pairs. Twenty letters are enough for the two teams, seven of which are used more than one time, so that in reality the names could be built out of thirteen pieces of type.

"The democratic ticket is by a wide margin the shortest ever put out, Polk and Dallas in 1844, Pierce and King in 1852, and Cass and Butler in 1848, each taking ten letters, being the only ones close to the mark. The longest was Cleveland and Stevenson in 1892, eighteen letters. The republican ticket is as short as any in history. Grant and Colfax in 1868, Grant and Wilson in 1872, and Blaine and Logan in 1884, each with eleven letters, were the only tickets as short, while the longest was Roosevelt and Fairbanks in 1904, eighteen letters, the same as the democratic record.

"Bryan has the shortest name of any candidate the democrats ever named for president, except Polk and Cass in 1848. Taft has the fewest number of letters in his name of any republican presidential candidate in history. Kern has the shortest name of any democratic vice presidential candidate, except King, 1852. Sherman's seven letters of course bar him from making any universal showing in the short letter race.

"The short ticket means the actual saving of thousands of dollars in the composition of the great mass of literature that will be used in the campaign. Each candidate's name will be used hundreds of thousands of times, in every variety of print from the smallest miscroscopic type to the yard high bill board letters. To headliners the tickets are happy hunting grounds, to printers they are easy to mold and set up, and to the public in general they are practically impossible to misspell or mispronounce."

Jacob Gross.

Jacob Gross, an aged and highly respected citizen of Spring township, died at his home at Axe Mann Sunday morning after a brief illness. Mr. Gross had been in his usual good health until Saturday evening when he was about the house he was suddenly taken ill and evidently had a paralytic stroke. He was taken into the house and was apparently much better in the evening. Towards morning and was again stricken and at a quarter before seven o'clock he passed away.

The deceased was born in St. Marys, Elk county, and was aged about 73 years. He was at one time a resident of Lewistown and came to Axe Mann about thirty-nine years ago, where he was employed as an axe maker when the Mann axe factory was in operation at that place. Mr. Gross was a member of the Bellefonte Catholic church and was very prompt in his attendance at the church services, usually walking to town to attend to his religious duties.

He is survived by his wife, who was Miss Catherine Apt, and the following children; Henry, whose address is unknown at present; John, of Findlay, Ohio; Will of Mill Hall; Frank, George and Mary, at home, and Mrs. Ira Proudfoot, of Altoona, He also has one sister living at St. Marys who is aged about 87 years.

The friends met at the house at Axe Mann on Wednesday morning at nine o'clock and came to the Catholic church in Bellefonte, where solemn requiem mass was held at ten o'clock by Rev. Father McArdle. Interment was made in the Catholic cemetery.

That the roots of many native plants, growing wild in our American forests, possess remarkable properties for the cure of human maladies is well proven. Even the untutored Indian had learned the curative value of some of these and taught the early settlers their uses. The Indian never liked to work so he wanted his squaw to get well as soon as possible that she migh do the work and let him hunt. Therefore, he dug "papoose root" for her, for that was their great remedy for female weakness. Dr. Pierce uses the same root called Blue Cohosh—in his "Favorite Prescription," skillfully combined with other agents that make it more effective than any other medicine in curing all the various weaknesses and painful derangements peculiar to women.

Many afflicted women have been saved from the operating table and the surgeon's knife by the timely use of Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Tenderness over the lower region, with backache, spells of dizziness, faintness, bearing down pains or distress should not go unheeded. A course of "Favorite Prescription" will work marvelous benefit in all such cases, and generally effect a permanent cure if persisted in for a reasonable length of time.

For constipation, the true, scientific cure is Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. Mild, harmless, yet sure.

Do You Open Your Mouth

Like a young bird and gulp down whatever food or medicine may be offered you? Or, do you want to know something of the composition and character of that which you take into your stomach whether as food or medicine?

Most intelligent and sensible people now-a-days insist on knowing what they employ whether as food or as medicine. Dr. Pierce believes they have a perfect right to insist upon such knowledge. So he publishes broadcast and on each bottle-wrapper, what his medicines are made of and verifies it under oath. This he feels he can well afford to do because the more the ingredients of which his medicines are made are studied and understood the more will their superior curative virtues be appreciated.

For the cure of woman's peculiar weaknesses, irregularities and derangements, giving rise to frequent headaches, backache, dragging-down pain or distress in lower abdominal or pelvic region, accompanied, ofttimes, with a debilitating, pelvic, catarrhal drain and kindred symptoms of weakness, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a most efficient remedy. It is equally effective in curing painful periods, in giving strength to nursing mothers and in preparing the system of the expectant mother for baby's coming, thus rendering childbirth safe and comparatively painless. The "Favorite Prescription" is a most potent, strengthening tonic to the general system and to the organs distinctly feminine in particular. It is also a soothing and invigorating nervine and cures nervous exhaustion, nervous prostration, neuralgia, hysteria, spasms, chorea or St. Vitus's dance, and other distressing nervous symptoms attendant upon functional and organic diseases of the distinctly feminine organs.

A host of medical authorities of all the several schools of practice, recommend each of the several ingredients of which "Favorite Prescription" is made for the cure of the diseases for which it is claimed to be a cure. You may read what they say for yourself by sending a postal card request for a free booklet of extracts from the leading authorities, to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., and it will come to you by return post.

CARS RACE DOWN SLOPE

Fatal Disaster Near Hawk Run, in Clearfield County

THREE WERE KILLED

When Rope Drawing Mine Cars Broke Rushed Back with Terrific Speed Into Opening

THE MINERS WERE BURIED ALIVE

Three miners are known to be dead and five others are missing as the result of a disaster Friday evening at the Acme slope in Hawk Run, Clearfield county. The rope drawing five loaded mine cars up the steep incline suddenly snapped and the train on which eight miners were riding rushed back with terrific speed into the opening. At the entry the cars were derailed, piling up with a crash, scattering wreckage and causing the mine to cave in with a rumbling roar that communicated the disaster to the miner's colony nearby. The dead are: Joseph Toshral, Joseph Kay and an unknown miner.

It was shortly after 6 o'clock and the last trip of the day. To gain the entry it was necessary to force the load up a sharp incline. The train had almost reached its destination when the rope snapped. There was no opportunity to give any alarm. The loaded cars started back, their speed greatly accelerated as the heavy load rushed into the mine. The crash as the runaways finally wound up at the entry seemed but a whisper compared with the terrific roar when the entrance caved in. Tons of earth fell from all sides, burying the unfortunate miners alive.

Great crowds gathered at the wrecked mine and kept vigil while the dead bodies were being dug from the mass of earth. Three bodies have been removed. If there are others who were killed their fate was not known this morning as it will require hours of constant work to safely penetrate the piled up earth. Crews of workmen have been engaged all night searching for bodies.

Some Timely Suggestions.

One of our regular readers who possesses a keen faculty of observation, has noted the following facts which we consider very timely:

It has been remarked by several of our citizens that there is a noticeable freedom from flies, sparrows and mosquitoes this summer in Bellefonte as compared with other years and the fact is thought to be occasioned by the observance of the sanitary laws in that respect, and it is hoped they will continue to make our pretty little borough a thing of beauty and a joy forever.

The ease with which this can be accomplished is by remembering as a preventative for mosquitoes the fact that stagnant water of any kind which if it sets in a tin can in the back yard two days the crop of mosquitoes is ready and ripe for any body within a radius of one thousand feet, so empty the tin cans and throw a few drops of coal oil on the mud puddles and they will soon all disappear. Flies breed in the corners of dirty rooms, a little pile of dirt as large as a pea means a million flies in a month so see that your houses and places of business are clean into the corners and disinfected with some mild disinfectant and the flies will go. The sparrows seem to have extinguished themselves with the aid of the householders and the small boy and if their nests and young are destroyed in the spring you can soon exterminate the breed in a community.

Rats are the most dangerous pests of the human race even far more so than mosquitoes as they carry all sorts of diseases and should be gone after in every way shape or form.

The Show Pleased All.

As the Howes' London shows were practically unknown and unheard of in this vicinity it was a question to many whether or not the show would be worth anything. Since witnessing the afternoon performance and being able to judge for ourselves we have endeavored to get the opinion of others and find that there was a general expression of satisfaction on the part of those who attended. Everybody had a word of praise for the little Japanese acrobats as well as the American boy and girl, while throughout the performance was all that was claimed for it.

It was remarked by many that the show carried with it the nicest set of laborers of any that has ever been in Bellefonte. There was a lack of the rough language and rowdyism that is generally found among this class of men. The managers of the show were very courteous in their business dealings and a set of very pleasant gentleman.

There was a good attendance at the evening performance notwithstanding that the rain shortly after the supper hour had a tendency to keep some away.

CHAOS IN A LIBRARY.

Sarcey's Fearfully Bad Luck With Custodians of His Books

Francisque Sarcey had a splendid library, of which he was very proud, and there are many stories told in Paris about the singular fates, comic and tragic, that overtook the librarians who successively looked after the late critic's books.

The first was a released convict, who pleaded that to be much among good books would reform him. Sarcey, pugnacious in print, was the kindliest of men in practice. He yielded to the plea. Unfortunately his protege carried the ethical cure too far, for one day he decamped, taking with him the best of M. Sarcey's good books.

The second was a distinctly minor dramatist, Debrit by name and debris by nature. He had worn himself into an incurable melancholy by persistent addiction to the humorist vaudeville habit. Sarcey saw that abstinence from further composition could only be secured if the man had some light occupation with a living wage. He established him in the vacancy left by the convict. A few days later as the critic, returning from the theater, drew his carriage up before his door he heard a smash of shivered glass above him, followed a minute later by what he no longer dared to call a dull thud on the pavement below. The woe begone librarian, wearied of life, had thrown himself out of the window. With his last breath he cursed Sarcey as his murderer.

Third in order was one Bernard, a gladsome youth, whose blithe temperament promised relief from the gloom cast by his predecessor. In the height of his glee he pulled out all the books so as to rearrange them in more logical order on the shelves. He stacked them in craggy pyramids all over the floor. But it happened to be the special day of the week whereon Sarcey was wont to have a few of his theatrical friends, male and female, to lunch with him. After lunch a dance followed as a matter of course. Nothing could dismay the librarian. He whisked the pyramids to four walls and joined in the dance. Next day he asked permission to go home and see his mother. He never returned. The pyramids had to be sorted out by Sarcey's manservant and put pellmell on the shelves again.

The last librarian was Mlle. Blouska, an elderly Polish maiden, who proved an invaluable assistant until she perished miserably in the fire at the charity ball in Paris.

INDIAN MARRIAGES.

Peculiar Rites of the Hopi and the Navajo Tribes.

Marriage among the Topi, a tribe of the Pueblo Indians, is an institution regarding which those most concerned have least to say. When the parents of a girl find it expedient for her to get married, they look up an available man and negotiate with his parents. After the matter has been arranged the principals are notified. The girl goes to the home of the groom's parents and grinds corn for them for three weeks, while the groom makes a kind of sash for the bride. Then one morning at sunrise they both bathe their heads in cold water, which completes the ceremony. There have been instances of the groom's refusing to go through the performance, which has then proceeded without him and been accounted valid, and several weeks later he has yielded and had his head bathed.

The Navajo ceremony is much more elaborate and impressive, but then the Navajo girls are much nicer. The regular tariff on a Navajo girl entering the port of matrimony for the first time is twelve horses. On the second occasion the tax is nine horses, while subsequent entries are free.

This is not purchase money, but is merely a tribute of respect to a mother-in-law and a token of appreciation of the care and expense involved in bearing and rearing the lady, a recognition not unworthy of consideration by civilized grooms. On the other hand, and deserving of great condemnation, is that law of many tribes, unwritten, but of much sanctity, that a man and his mother-in-law shall never meet after the ceremony.—A. W. Dimock in Outing Magazine.

Coral Islands.

A coral island is sometimes torn to pieces by a great storm, showing that islands disappear in more ways than one. This happened to an atoll in the Marshall group in 1905, when it happened to be in the path of a terrible hurricane. Waves about forty feet high swept over the hapless speck of land, carrying every particle of verdure and every form of life into the sea, and not a human being was saved. The upper part of the coral was broken off and swept away, and a few days later nothing but the placid waters of the ocean was seen where the atoll had stood.

A SURPRISED SWORDSMAN.

Judge Goffe's Play With a Bragging Fencing Master.

A fencing master appeared in Boston one winter in the seventeenth century and had erected a stage on which he strutted up and down at certain hours, defying any and all to engage in sword play with him.

After this had gone on for several days and the man's boasts had become insufferable Judge William Goffe and Edward Whalley, the famous English political refugees, disguised themselves in rustic costume and appeared before the alleged master. Goffe held in one hand a cheese wrapped in a napkin, which he used for a shield, and carried a mop which he had soaked in muddy water as he passed a puddle.

Thus equipped, the judge mounted the stage. The fencer railed at him for his impudence, asked him what business he had there and ordered him to begone. The judge stood his ground. Then the gladiator made a pass at him with his sword to drive him off. The judge received the sword in his cheese and held it there till he had drawn the mop over the professor's face and smeared him with mud. Another plunge by the enraged maitre d'armes resulted similarly, this time the judge poking the mop into his eyes. This operation was repeated a third time.

Then the maddened fencing master dropped his ordinary sword and grabbed up a huge broadsword. Thereupon the judge said:

"Stop, sir! Hitherto, you see, I have only played with you and not attempted to do you harm, but if you come at me now with the broadsword know that I will certainly take your life!"

The master was impressed by the firmness with which the judge spoke, for he dropped the point of his weapon and exclaimed: "Who can you be? You must be either Goffe, Whalley or the devil, for there was no other man in England that could beat me!"—Boston Post.

HE GOT THE TICKET.

A Simple Little Errand That Made a Lot of Commotion.

One of the most amusing accidents imaginable happened to an old gentleman in one of our large eastern cities. He was asked to buy a ticket to a fireman's ball and good naturedly complied. The next question was what to do with it. He had two servants, either of whom would be glad to use it, but he did not wish to show favoritism.

Then it occurred to him that he might buy another ticket and give both his servants a pleasure. Not knowing where the tickets were sold, he inquired of a policeman, and the officer suggested that he go to the engine house. So the old gentleman went to the engine house that evening, but there was no one in sight. He had never been in such a place before and stood for a moment or so uncertain how to make his presence known.

Presently he saw an electric button on the side of the room, and he put his thumb on it.

The effect was electrical in every sense of the word. Through the ceiling, down the stairs and from every other direction firemen came running and falling, the horses rushed out of their stalls, and, in short, all the machinery of a modern engine house was instantly in motion.

Amid all this uproar stood the innocent old gentleman, who did not suspect that he had touched the fire alarm until the men clamored around him for information as to the locality of the fire.

Then he said mildly, "I should like to buy another ticket for the ball, if you please."

The situation was so ludicrous that there was a general shout of laughter, and the old gentleman bought his ticket, and the engine house resumed its former state of quiet.—Exchange.

Smells in Great Cities.

The man with a nose always recognizes the smell of the place, and he has only to land at Calais to smell garlic. London's smell—when the Londoner returns—is just soot and fried fish. Paris always smells of chocolate and wood smoke. Florence is violets and sewage. But so soon as you get to Russia the smell is quite different. Moscow, the city of fruit that comes from the Crimea, has a special smell of the cranberry (which has various names) in late summer. And you cannot land in St. Petersburg without noticing instantly the smell of the place. —London Chronicle.

Pyramids.

The largest of the Mexican pyramids, that of Cholula, has a base measurement of 1,488 feet and a height of 178 feet. The Great pyramid of Egypt, sometimes called the pyramid of Cheops, stands on a base each side of which was originally 764 feet long; but, owing to the removal of the coating, it is now only 746 fet. Its height, according to Wilkenson, was originally 480 feet 9 inches. Its present height being 460 feet.—New York American.

WONDERFUL MIRAGES.

False Peak of Tenerife and Illusions In the Dardanelles.

The peak of Tenerife is known among deep sea sailors as the "false peak." Owing to some peculiarity of the atmosphere it is always seen by mirage in exactly the opposite direction from which it lies, and only the fact that all captains know that the mirage appears long before the true peak is visible through the most powerful glass prevents many a ship from sailing many miles out of her course. It is hard for a greenhorn to believe that the majestic purple mountain towering astern or on the port beam apparently only a short distance off is in reality miles away in exactly the opposite direction and the seemingly solid earth at which he is gazing is only a reflection on the clear mirror of the air. Many weird tales are told of shipwrecked men who have steered for the false peak in the expectation of finding land and have perished of hunger and thirst while pursuing the phantom mountain.

Sometimes the passengers and crew of a vessel on the lookout for the false peak see a much rarer and more beautiful mirage, that of a ship in the sky. It usually appears about 10 o'clock in the morning, about ten degrees above the horizon and under full sail, every delicate spar and tapering mast clearly visible against the blue ether and even the play of light and shadow in the bellying canvas plainly discernible to the naked eye. It generally remains in sight half an hour or more before gracefully fading away. The oldest mariner can never remember having seen the mirage of a steamer in that latitude, but always that of a full rigged ship, and this peculiar fact has given birth to many romantic legends about the ship in the sky, all connecting it in some way with the false peak.

The vicinity of the Dardanelles is the real home of mirages, and it is seldom that any vessel sails along the Syrian coast without seeing one or more. Oddly enough, the mirages of the Dardanelles are always the reflections of objects that can be seen with the naked eye and are invariably distorted in grotesque and fantastic caricatures of the things reflected. It is certainly startling to see a steamer bearing down with her masts where her water line and should be and the water line where the tops of the masts and funnel ought to show, while her decks are in the right place, thus adding to her uncanny appearance, but this is a frequent sight near the Dardanelles. There is one peculiar feature of the mirages which hover near the false peak—the real objects of which they are reflections are so far away that very often they are never sighted until long after the reflection has vanished, and sometimes not at all.—New York Press.

The Lion's Attack.

As to a lion's method of attack Frederick Courteney Selous says in his book: "As a rule, I think, a lion seizes a sleeping man by the head, and in that case, unless it is a very old and weakly animal, death must usually be instantaneous, as its great fang teeth will be driven into the brain through the thickest negro skull." Similarly, when a lion attacks an animal it tries to get at the head or the throat—at the vitals of the animal. Says Mr. Selous: "My experience is that when a single lion tries to kill an ox or a buffalo it invariably seizes it near the muzzle with one paw and usually succeeds in either breaking its victim's neck or causing it to break it itself by its own weight in falling. When several lions attack an ox or a buffalo they will often bite and tear it all over and take a long time to kill it."

Curious Old Laws.

Some of the old laws of Nepal, India, were curious. Killing cows ranked with murder as a capital offense, for instance. Every girl at birth was married with great ceremony to a betel fruit, which was then cast into a sacred stream. As the fate of the fruit was uncertain the girl was supposed never to become a widow. To obtain divorce from a husband a wife had only to place a betel nut under his pillow and depart. In Nepal the day is considered to begin when it is light enough to count the tiles on the roof or distinguish the hairs on a man's hand against the sky.

Trained.

"My men work well," said a police commissioner, "because they are well trained. Training, you know, is everything."

He paused and smiled.

"Two physicians were discussing," he said, "a certain pretty nurse.

"'Was she a trained nurse?' said the first physician.

"'She must have been,' replied the other. 'She hadn't been in the hospital a week before she was engaged to the richest patient.'"—Washington Star.

A Limited Luxury.

Two Irishmen were discussing the phenomenon of sleep. Said one, "Oi hear as wan av thim poethry lads calls it 'bald nature's hair reshtoorer.'"

"Yis," assented the other; "shlape's a grand luxury. It's a pity a man can't kape awake long enough to inj'y it. Jist whin he's thinkin' phat a foine long shnooze he'll be hovin', begorra, it's mornin'!"—Judge.

Gallant Lover.

"Silly boy," she said, "why did you get offended? Though my words were severe, you might have seen that I was smiling."

"Well," he replied magnanimously, "your mouth is so small I didn't notice it."—Philadelphia Press.

SHOULD FIGURE IT OUT.

In spite of the fact that dairying, as a rule, is a paying proposition and those sections of the country where dairying is carried on extensively are the most prosperous, it is more than likely that a whole lot of farmers are conducting this branch of work at an absolute loss. Whether this is the case or not may be determined by taking a lead pencil and doing a little figuring. To the amounts received from the sale of milk or cream during the year should be added the value of butter, cream and milk consumed by the family as well as the skimmilk fed to animals on the farm, which would be worth 20 to 40 cents per hundredweight. If these items added up do not give a total greater than the number of cows kept through the year times $30, which is generally accepted as the cost of a cow's keep for a year, it is a pretty safe conclusion that the dairy is being operated at a loss, barring the benefit which the cows are to the farm as manufacturers of manure, which, of course, should not be ignored. In other words, if a dairy of ten cows does not give a total revenue of better than $300 for the year it goes without saying that there is no profit. This condition of affairs may be due to the fact that the milk capacity of the whole herd is low both in quantity and quality. It is more likely that some individuals of the herd are fairly good milkers, while there are other individuals that are not paying for their keep, in which case they should be weeded out by the Babcock test. It is possible, too, that the dairy is not giving the revenue it should because the cows are insufficiently fed and are given rough rather than kind and careful treatment. It may be one or all of these causes which serve to make the dairy unprofitable; but, whether one or all, they should be sought out and corrected so far as possible.

A PREVENTABLE LOSS.

Experiments conducted by the department of soils of the Ohio experiment station show that in a ten year average manure that is left exposed to the weather and allowed to leech for a period of three months is worth $2.15 per ton measured in crops and worth $2.95 per ton on the same basis if aplied to the land fresh. A little work with a lead pencil on this proposition shows that the actual loss in value per ton during three months is 81 cents, or 21 cents per month, while with 100 tons of manure the loss would be $80, or the value of an average acre of land. It is in the face of such figures as these that one is able to grasp the statement of Professor Hopkins of the Illinois Agricultural college, who after careful study placed the loss to the farmers of the United States from this one cause at annually close to $700,000,000. The thoughtful farmer should look into the matter and find out if he is one of the guilty ones and following a method in the handling of his homemade fertilizers which is helping to make this enormous loss.

THE WHY OF IT.

The reason why some farms maintain their fertility and even improve with years of use and why others possessing as great original fertility become virtually bankrupt in a comparatively short time is pointed out quite plainly in the following figures, which show the amount of fertility which goes from a farm in the sale of the different products. In $1,000 of wheat there is removed $240 of fertility; in $1,000 of beef, $85; in $1,000 of pork, $60; in $1,000 of horses, $35; in $1,000 of milk, $1.10; in $1,000 of butter, $1.25 worth of fertility. From this it is plain to be seen why grain raising and selling depiete the fertility of farms and why those sections where dairying is carried on extensively are among the most fertile of the whole country and grow richer rather than poorer as the years go by. There is something here for the average farmer to ponder over.

CHRONICALLY BEHINDHAND.

There are occasional cases in the average season when belated farm work is traceable to unfavorable weather or hard luck in other ways, but in the majority of cases this being behindhand with work is likely to be a sort of chronic condition with men of the slack, slow type or those who have more work on their hands than they can attend to with help that may be available. It is noteworthy as proving the above statement that certain farmers of a community are almost always well up or ahead with their work, while others can be counted on to be about so much behind. In a period of years this habit of being ahead or behind with the farming operations has a great deal to do with the value as well as the volume of crop returns and the size of a fellow's bank account.

A crop rotation which does not include clover or some other legume is but a makeshift system of rotation and hardly worthy of the name.

The weather forecaster who expressed it as his view at the opening of spring that this was to be the first of a series of seven dry years seems to have been a little bogged up on his meteorological calculations.

It is well to remember that no poison of any kind should be put on the cabbage plants after they have begun to head. Some one who has tried it speaks highly of black pepper as an effective dose for the green worms when they begin work on the cabbage.

It is generally conceded that homemade fertilizers are not only in the long run the cheapest, but the most effective as well from the standpoint of crop production. It need hardly be said that these can only be produced in considerable amounts under a stock raising or dairy system of farming.

While it is too late now to talk about fertilizers and preparation of the seed bed in connection with this year's corn crop, it is worth while remembering that the mechanical stirring of the soil with cultivator plays a most important part in making both moisture and plant food in the soil available for the growing crop. This one fact in connection with the tillage of crops is all too little realized.

The boys and girls who acquire the habit of helping in all ways possible about the house are acquiring habits that will go a long way toward making them desirable husbands and wives when they start housekeeping on their own hook. Usually the father who plays ball and goes fishing now and then with his boys has little trouble in securing either their respect or their obedience and can count on them to help him out if he gets in a pinch.

It is noticeable that, while the quality of butter made by the creameries of the country is quite uniform in character, the quality of cheese produced in different sections shows a much wider variation. This may be due in part to the fact that, being so much the larger industry, buttermaking has been given more attention. Perhaps a still greater factor is that in cheesemaking the stuff with which the manufacturer works is subject to wider variations. Then there is a vast difference in the minds of a good many as to what constitutes a good cheese.

The seed corn gospel which has been preached so persistently for the past two or three years seems to be bearing definite fruit this year in the shape of a much improved stand of corn in most sections of the corn belt. Reports from many quarters are to the effect that the stand this year is from 10 to 25 per cent better than it was last, and this in spite of the fact that not in years has good seed corn been a scarcer article at any price than it was this spring. This means that extra precautions were taken to thoroughly test the seed and in the preparation of the ground before planting.

All of our readers are acquainted with the fact that one of the greatest pests with which the agriculturist has to contend in Australia is that of rabbits. The origin of the pest is a matter of interest. About a generation ago, roughly thirty-five years, an English born resident of the continent became homesick and thought it would be fine to have some English rabbits playing about his place. As a result he imported a pair. Conditions were favorable, and the animals increased with enormous rapidity until today the government has a standing offer of $100,000 for any one who will devise a practical means of exterminating them, while immense sums of money have been spent by the government and individuals in an effort to keep the rabbits in check.

A recent bulletin issued by the department of agriculture on "Rabies," besides giving in detail the results obtained by different methods of treating the disease, describes the progress which has been made in stamping it out by preventive measures. Among others, the case of Prussia is cited, where prior to 1875 rabies had been prevalent, especially in the city of Berlin. In that year a law was passed which provided for the killing of all dogs suspected of having rabies and the muzzling and leading of all dogs when in public places. This led to the complete eradication of the disease, no case having occurred in Berlin since 1883. In Australia the disease has never been known because the infectious agent has never gained a foothold on the continent, and in recent years the government has prevented such an occurrence by the enactment of laws which absolutely exclude the importation of dogs into the country.

It is refreshing to note that leading agricultural papers of the country not only do not carry booze ads. of any description, but are very emphatic as well as indignant in their denial of the claim recently made by the Brewers' association that the spread of the temperance sentiment over the country was going to ruin or at least bring hard times on the farmer as a result of decreasing the demand for corn and other grains in the manufacture of whisky and beer. One journal of the above class states with truth that one of the chief items of expense which the farmers of the country have to bear in the shape of taxes is criminal court expense, in many cases the direct result of the sale of intoxicating liquor.

If rape is desired as a fall feed, it should be sowed in the cornfield at the rate of about five pounds to the acre at the time of the last cultivation.

If slugs appear on the rosebushes or larger worms on the currant or gooseberry bushes, they may be disposed of by sprinkling the bushes with a solution of one ounce of white hellebore to two gallons of water or by dusting the bushes with the unmixed powder.

Beet sugar statistics for the past year show that in point of production Michigan stood next to Colorado, her output being 37,300,000 pounds in the sixteen factories of the state. In the disposal of the byproducts of the sugar factories the pulp is dried and sold to farmers or fed wet to nearby dairy herds, while the tops are put in silos and make an excellent feed.

When farmers over the country come to own automobiles quite extensively a mighty impetus will be given to the cause of improved highways. We have in mind a number of farmers who own autos, and in almost every case they are willing to do more than their share of the work with a King road drag in order to keep the highways firm and smooth.

Gifford Pinchot, chief forester of the department of agriculture, recently made a statement to a congressional investigating committee to the effect that, at the present rate of cutting, the spruce supply of New Hampshire would be exhausted in twenty-five years, in New York in eight years, in Minnesota in nine years and in Maine in twenty-eight. It was his further opinion that these lands could be cut over again in thirty years.

A farmer living in the vicinity where the writer lives makes a practice of putting in all his spare time hauling manure out from town and enriching his land therewith. That hauled in time is plowed under in the spring, while that got during the summer months is piled up and scattered on the land after the crops are harvested in the fall. It is not surprising that as a result of this practice our friend's crops are larger than those of many of his neighbors.

Experiments conducted last year at the West Virginia agricultural station go to show that, while a ration of grain given to cows that are on pasture may keep them in somewhat better physical condition and keep up their flow of milk, the increase in butter fat is not sufficient to pay for the cost of the grain ration. This would seem to be based on the assumption of a flush pasture and that the cows would eat additional grass to take the place of the higher priced grain ration.

In spite of the rapidly decreasing supplies of lumber in the United States the cut of last year was larger than in any other year in the history of lumbering, reaching the enormous total of 37,550,736,000 board feet, the mill value of which was $621,151,388. There were produced, besides this, 11,953,260,000 shingles, valued at $24,175,555, and 8,812,807,000 lath, valued at $11,490,570. It is in view of such figures as the above that so great solicitude is being manifested by farsighted men at the present time in the matter of conserving our forest resources.

The rather extreme and in many cases high handed methods which have been followed by the Kentucky Tobacco Growing association in harassing independents or those members of the association who would not abide by their price agreements have been deemed necessary in a struggle which the organized tobacco growers have been waging against the tobacco trust, which, if it could have its way, would beat the price of the plant down to a point where there would be little but starvation in it for the grower. Since the growers organized they have been able to realize nearly a half more for their product. The work of the Night Riders, who can hardly be countenanced under a law abiding order of things, is a feature in an economic struggle in which the existence of the tobacco growers is virtually at stake.

A good many who may be acquainted with the name Morgan as applied to a breed of horses, yet do not know the origin of the type, may be interested in the fact that the first representative of this breed was taken as a two-year-old colt by his owner, Justin Morgan, from West Springfield, Mass., to Randolph, Vt., in the year 1791. This first Morgan, as he later proved to be, was all bay in color, possessed great beauty as well as fine style and action, had a remarkably kind and gentle disposition and could, furthermore, outpull or outrun any horse of any size with which he was matched. This horse was the sire of three colts, all of which proved to be the heads of famous strains of the breed. In subsequent years, especially since the civil war, the breed has been neglected because of a desire on the part of horsemen for animals of a larger size and possessed of greater speed for short distances. Within the past year or two, however, a new interest has been manifested in an attempt on the part of the federal government to secure representatives of the breed for one or two stations with a view to raising them and thus keeping the breed from becoming extinct.

A block and tackle had been hooked to the eye on the band where the guy wire is fastened and four men were pulling the painter up when the block slipped off the eye and slid down the guy line quite a distance, giving the painter quite a scare. When the block slipped off the man was about 20 feet from the ground and by the men holding to the rope he escaped injury.

—Two men were killed at Shrader, Mifflin county, Saturday night when a steam traction engine broke through a wooden bridge that spans Honey creek. William Close was running the engine and was accompanied by Ellis Alexander and they were leaving the place where they had threshed during the day to set up at the next farm to be ready for work Monday. —Rural mail carriers who want a vacation at the expense of the government will have to crowd in between July 1 and Nov. 1, according to an order just issued by the postoffice department at Washington. Rural carriers are allowed two weeks off each year with pay. In the part they were permitted to take their two weeks whenever they desired and it did not matter to the government whether it was taken in July or March just so it was taken. It is all different now. Rural carriers will have to take their time off during the nice weather and will not be able to lay off in the winter time when the country roads are at their worst.

—In a pamphlet issued by the State Highway department giving the numbers and to whom the licenses were issued for the month of June shows a rapid increase for that month. At the first of the month the number licensed was 17,626 and at the close it had swelled to 20,094 and by this time it must be beyond the 21,000 mark. While the list shows the bulk of machines are owned in the state, there are many licensed to people living in other states, some as far as Iowa who desired to pass through this state. One Chicago man got a license so he could go to New York, all the Pennsylvania soil be touched being in Erie county.

—Some of the newspapers throughout the country have been keeping a close watch on the number of deaths resulting from the Fourth of July accidents. The list has been slowly increasing since that day and other victims are likely to be added. The known list for the entire country is most impressive and carries with it its own lesson. The deaths from Fourth of July wounds this year is now 112, while the injured is 2,812. Compare that with our total losses in Cuba during the Spanish American war, in which 295 were killed and 1,533 injured. And yet this Fourth was comparatively "safe and sane" though the figures show that we are still a long way from safety and sanity.

Arrested for Theft.

Since the night of the 21st of April, when Montgomery & Co's clothing store and Zellers drug store was broken into and several articles of wearing apparel and a suit case were stolen, Policeman Wm. Beezer has been quietly working on the case. A short time ago he got hold of a clue which he followed up and on Wednesday Joseph Wolfe and Charles Nighthart were taken into custody. The young men were given a hearing before Squire Keichline Wednesday afternoon. The principal witness in the case was Charles Gunter, a stack painter who has been working here at frequent intervals It appears that Wolfe had told Gunter some things in connection with the robbery and had made arragements to take him to a barn at Armours gap one evening to get the stolen articles which were hidden there. Upon their arrival at the barn several men were about and the clothing and suit case were not secured at that time.

Most of the evidence against Nighthart was brought in by Wolfe and it is very uncertain whether or not he was implicated the robbery The evidence against both was deemed sufficient to hold them and they were bound over court. Nighthart was released on $300 bail while Wolfe in default of $500 bail was incarcerated in the county jail.

Mr. Scott is a practical concrete contractor, and as soon as his bond is filed he will begin work on the new bridge.

Mr. Runkle at once had a warrant sworn out for Sellers arrest and he was placed in the county jail, It is quite probable that Sellers will be held for assault and battery and he should receive the full extent of the law for such an unwarranted attack upon the official. Mr. Runkle did not suffer any serious injuries from the effects of the blow.
